

the marauding droids found in corridors.

Once R2-D2 is positioned in front of a console he can be plugged into it. In the case of a console controlling a lift, if access is granted to the subgame and it is completed, R2 can operate the lift, up and down.

KEYBOARD CONTROLS

The status area at the top of the screen reveals your score and the health of the escaping duo (on the left) and their inventory (on the right).

Crystals

C-3PO can dispose of patrolling droids by lobbing a crystal at them – you start with 25. Some droids die after one hit, others take two hits while some take three to kill.

Every so often a crystal is left behind when C-3PO kills a flashing droid. Walk C-3PO into this crystal and 25 throwing crystals are added to your inventory – up to the maximum of 99. Collecting this crystal also rejuvenates both droids if they have been taking knocks – their health readout improves a little.

Passes

Three levels of security clearance exist with the game. Level 3 is the lowest, and allows access to any droid. Consoles that require Level 1 or 2 clearance require R2-D2 to insert an appropriate pass before access is granted to the subgame. A pass can only be used once, allowing a single attempt at the subgame.

Passes are gained by killing droids – they're left behind when a flashing droid is killed and collected like the crystals. The patrolling droids have security clearance at Level 1, 2 or 3 and you have to kill the appropriate number of Level 1 or Level 2 droids before a Level 1 or Level 2 pass is earned.

Hazards

R2-D2 and C-3PO have only one life – if their energy readout hits zero the game ends. Headbutting the patrolling droids or walking into them saps energy – although contact with a patrolling droid inflicts as much damage as one hit with a throwing crystal. Drills, cannon, electric barriers and electric sparks, fire sprinklers and magnets all sap vital energy from your droids, so keep an eye on that energy meter!

The Higher Levels

The higher R2-D2 and C-3PO get in the base, the more hazards they face – and the subgames that lie behind consoles become progressively harder.
